UNIT - V

SKILLS FOR CHILD PROTECTION AND PARTICIPATION

5:00 Introduction

The term 'vulnerability' is derived from the Latin word "vulnus" meaning 'wound'. Vulnerability refers to the state that has a high chance of getting physically or emotionally wounded. Thus children who are being at great risk of experiencing physical or emotional harm are termed as vulnerable children. Child vulnerability is the outcome of the interaction of a range of individual and environmental factors, which grows over time.

Types and degrees of child vulnerability varies depending on many factors. Individual functioning of children with disabilities of various forms, is limited by physical, emotional, sensory and communication impairments and are highly vulnerable to child abuse, as compared to normal children. The UNCRC stipulates government's responsibilities to take protective and preventive measures against child abuse of all forms.

In this unit, Identification of children in Vulnerable situations, Identifying and recognizing the warning signs and factors of varying types of child abuse and neglect, Skills to deal with the children affected by violence, Role of teachers and other professionals in diagnosing and reporting suspected cases of child abuse and neglect, Psycho-social support and referral services for the vulnerable children, Teachers as mentors of children for ensuring their participation and protection, Positive discipline techniques for the teachers and Skills for celebrating child rights are to be discussed in detail.

5:01 Identification of Children in Vulnerable Situations

A vulnerable child is one who has been identified as being at greater risk of experiencing physical or emotional harm or those who are at risk of achieving poor outcomes due to the interactions of factors in their lives, which are individual as well as environmental.

A child below the age of 18 who is currently or likely to be in adverse conditions, thereby subject to significant physical, emotional or mental stress resulting in inhibited development is called 'vulnerable'.

Some vulnerable groups may include children who :

- are orphaned.
- are living without the basic necessities.
- are not going to school.
- are suffering from some type of abuse or exploitation.
- are facing discrimination, such as a particular ethnic or religious group, or
- are involved in exploitative labour.

5:01:1 Factors Promoting Vulnerability in Children

Factors promoting child-vulnerability include:

- i) Physical, emotional, health and educational needs
- ii) Risk or experience of harm
- iii) Capability of primary care-givers to provide a safe environment
- iv) Absence of supportive relationship

- v) Wider community conditions beyond a family's control.

5:01:2 Recognizing the Different Kinds of Vulnerable Situations for Children

Vulnerable children could be identified by the type of vulnerable situations in which they find themselves i.e. the type / kind of vulnerability they are exposed to. There are four types of children's vulnerability. They are : i) Physical Vulnerability, (ii) Emotional Vulnerability, (iii) Social Vulnerability and (iv) Environmental Vulnerability.

5:01:2:01 Physical Vulnerability

It includes lack of or limited access to food, clothing, shelter, healthcare and education, suffering from infection with HIV, disabilities, exploitation and abuse. These factors adversely affect the child's health development and learning.

5:01:2:02 Emotional Vulnerability

This is mainly related to parental care, love, support, positive interactions among the members of the family, space to grieve and containment of emotions.

5:01:2:03 Social Vulnerability

It refers to the absence of supportive peer group, absence of role models to follow, or of guidance in difficult situations and risks in the immediate environment such as neighbourhood of residence and school.

5:01:2:04 Environmental Vulnerability

Environmental factors with a bearing on child's vulnerability operate both at the family and the community levels. Factors include material deprivation, parental ill-health, low family income, family stress, poverty and abuse, poor and abusive neighbourhood, poor school environment. Children face greater hardships and hazards in environmental vulnerability.

5:01:3 Indicators for Vulnerability in Children

There are some specific indicators for children's vulnerability, particularly in the individual, family and community contexts which help the teachers, facilitators and counsellors identify the children in vulnerable situations.

5:01:3:01 Indicators of Vulnerability for Children in Individual Context

- i) Any physical or mental disability or chronic illness that limits the functioning of the child.
- ii) HIV or other major illness.
- iii) Emotional or psychological problems.
- iv) Physical, emotional or sexual abuse.
- v) Looking sad at most times, sleepy, wearing torn or dirty clothes all the time.
- vi) Use of drugs such as alcohol, cigarette, cocaine, ganja etc.
- vii) Not attending school regularly, performing poorly in school and neglecting school work.
- viii) Lacking personal hygiene and not showing interest in personal care.
- ix) Lack of parental love and care, guidance and support.

5:01:3:02 Indicators of Vulnerability for Children in Family Situations

- i) Single parent family.
- ii) Parents / caregivers are not able to give due care to the child.

- iii) Handicapped or chronically ill parents such as bedridden parents.
- iv) Lack of resources to provide adequate care to the child.
- v) Over crowded residence of the child or ratio of children to caregivers is too high.
- vi) Alcoholic or emotionally disturbed parents.
- vii) Abusive parents / family / caregivers, not performing the care-giving role properly.
- viii) Lack of guidance and direction available from the family.

5:01:3:03 Indicators of Vulnerability for Children in the Community Context

- i) Risk of being exposed to dangerous situations.
- ii) High levels of poverty, prevailing in the community.
- iii) Unsafe environment, such as temporary settlements, lack of toilets, high crime rate.
- iv) Lack of facilities for children such as schooling, transport, play and medical care.
- v) Exposure of children to crime, gangs and drug use, at an early age.

5:02 Identifying and Recognizing the Warning Signs and Factors of Varying Types of Child Abuse and Neglect

5:02:1 Child Abuse and Neglect, its Various Types and their Factors

Child abuse happens when someone harms a child's body or emotional health, development and well-being. There are 4 main types : (i) Physical abuse, (ii) Sexual abuse, (iii) Emotional abuse and (iv) Neglect of the child. Factor is a circumstance or fact that contributes to an outcome i.e. a constituent or feature of a thing.

Let us discuss each of these four types of child abuse and the factors involved in it.

5:02:1:01 Physical Abuse

Physical abuse means that someone intentionally hurts a child's body, puts it in physical danger or inflict pain. It does not matter if the child gets seriously hurt or it leaves a mark. Any harm is abuse. It includes when someone:

- Burns a child

- Hits, kicks, or bites.
- Shakes or throws the child
- Throws objects at the child
- Ties up the child

5:02:1:02 Sexual Abuse

Sexual abuse is any kind of sexual activity with the child, not just physical contact. It includes when someone:

- Forces a child to take part in pornographic pictures or videos
- Has any sexual contact with the child, from kissing in a sexual way to having sex
- Making phone calls or send e-mails, texts or other messages that are sexual in any way.
- Shows pornography
- Shows some one else's genitals as with "flashing"

5:02:1:03 Emotional Abuse

Emotional child abuse means injuring a child's self-esteem or emotional well-being. It includes verbal and emotional assault such as continually belittling or berating a child as well as isolating, ignoring or rejecting a child. This can mean when some one:

- Abuses others when the child is around, such as a parent, brother, sister or pet
- Fails to show love and affection
- Ignores the child and does not give emotional support and guidance
- Shames, belittles, criticizes or embarrasses
- Teases, threatens, bullies or yells.

5:02:1:04 Neglect

Child neglect is when a care-giver does not give the child basic care and protection, such as :

- Food
- Clothing
- Shelter
- Clean living conditions
- Heat in cold weather
- Supervision
- Education
- Medical care

Neglect is also when someone leaves the child alone for long stretches of time or under dangerous conditions.

5:02:2 Warning Signs and Symptoms of Varying Types of Child Abuse

A child who is being abused may feel guilty, ashamed or confused. The child may be afraid to tell anyone about the abuse, especially if the abuser is a parent, other relative or family friend. That is why it is vital to watch for red flags, such as:

- withdrawal from friends or usual activities
- Changes in behaviour - such as aggression, anger, hostility or hyperactivity - or changes in school performance like poor academic achievement
- Depression, anxiety or unusual fears, or a sudden loss of self-confidence
- Sleeping problems and nightmares
- Express fear or anxiety about leaving school or going home or other place with particular persons
- Engage in high risk activities such as using drugs or alcohol

- Lack of personal care or hygiene
- Frequently absenting from school
- Rebellious or defiant behaviour
- Self-harm or attempts at suicide
- Inappropriate sexual behaviour

Specific signs and symptoms depend on the type of abuse and can vary. Keep in mind that warning signs are just that - warning signs. The presence of warning signs does not necessarily mean that a child is being abused.

5:02:2:01 Signs and Symptoms of Physical Abuse

- Bruises, broken bones (fractures) that can not be explained or do not match with the child's story
- Burns, especially from cigarettes; that can not be explained
- Injuries that are at different stages of healing

Kids who have been physically abused may also :

- Avoid any kind of touch or physical contact
- Be afraid to go home

- Seem to always be on high alert
- Wear clothing that does not match with the weather such as long sleeves on hot days – to cover up bruises
- Withdraw from friends and activities

5:02:2:02 Signs and Symptoms of Sexual Abuse

- Avoiding a certain person for no clear reason
- Bloody, torn or strained underwear
- Bruising or bleeding around the genitals
- Pain or itching around the genitals that might cause problems for walking or sitting
- Pregnancy or sexually transmitted diseases, especially for children under 14 years old
- Refusing to change clothes in front of others
- Running away from home
- Sexual activity or knowledge that is inappropriate for the child's age
- Inappropriate sexual behaviour with other children

5:02:2:03 Signs and Symptoms of Emotional Abuse

- Delayed or inappropriate emotional development
- Loss of self-confidence or self-esteem
- Social withdrawal or loss of interest or enthusiasm
- Depression
- Appears to desperately seek affection
- Avoidance of certain situations, such as refusing to go to school or ride the school bus
- A decrease in school performance or loss of interest in school
- The child does not seem close to a parent or care-giver
- Loss of previously acquired developmental skills
- Showing little interest in friends and activities

5:02:2:04 Signs and Symptoms of Neglect

- Poor personal cleanliness
- Lack of clothing and supplies to meet physical needs
- Eating more than usual at a meal or saving food for later

- Being left alone or in the care of other young children
- Poor weight gain and growth
- Poor record of school attendance
- Lack of appropriate attention for medical or dental problems or lack of necessary follow-up care

parental Behaviour

Sometimes a parent's behaviour sends red flags about child abuse. Warning signs include a parent who

- Shows little concern for the child
- Appears unable to recognize physical or emotional distress in the child
- Blames the child for all the problems
- Consistently belittles or berates the child, and describes the child with negative terms, such as "worthless" or "evil"
- Demands an inappropriate level of physical or academic performance
- Uses harsh physical punishment

- Strongly responds to negative behaviours, ignores child's positive behaviours
- Ridicules the child in public
- Severely limits the child's contact with others
- Shows lack of emotional interaction with child
- Offers conflicting or unconvincing explanations for child's injuries or no explanation at all.

5:03 Skills to Deal with the Children Affected by Violence

Dealing with the children affected by violence requires a compassionate and supportive approach. Important skills required to effectively interact with children affected by violence / abuse and provide supportive environment are listed below.

1. Listen Carefully to what they are saying

Remaining patient and focussing on what are being told by the affected / abused children are important skills required to deal with them. If we try to express our own views and feelings or appear shocked or as if we do not believe them, then it could make them stop talking and take back what they have said.

2. Give them the tools to talk

If they are struggling to talk, we should show them empathy and create a safe and supportive environment for the abused children to express their feelings. Interrupting or judging and validating their emotions to be avoided. Simple prompts to help them share what happened and how they are feeling should be provided.

3. Let them know they have done the right thing by telling you

If a child tells that he/she is experiencing abuse, it is important to reassure the child that he/she has done the right thing in telling you. The child should be made sure that the abuse is never his/her fault.

4. Establishing Rapport and Trust

Rapport and trust with children affected by violence could be established by showing genuine interest and concern. Children may keep the abuse secret because they may be scared that they may not be believed. We should make sure that they can trust us, by carefully and attentively listening to them and reassuring them our support in our talk repeatedly.

5. Using Age-appropriate Style and language in communication while discussing the violence / abuse.

6. Providing calm and Stable environments

Children exposed to trauma due to violence / abuse on them may be highly sensitive to environments with elements like intense light, loud noise or changes in structures or routines. A quiet environment with low level lighting, make them feel safe. Similarly, providing structure and consistent routines help them remain calm.

7. Not Confronting the alleged abuser

Confronting the alleged abuser could make the situation worse for the child.

8. Encouraging the violence affected child to participate in pro-social activities like playing, exercising like yoga, taking deep breaths, getting engaged in regular activities can help to reduce their mental stress.

9. Explaining what is to be done next

For younger children, we should explain that we are going to speak to someone like a school counsellor who will be able to help. For older children we should explain that it is better to report the abuse to someone who can help.

10. Reporting what the child has told you, as soon as possible

Report as soon as after you have been told about the abuse so that details are fresh in your mind and action can be taken quickly.

11. Arranging for Medical Treatment and/or Counselling

With the help of the school authorities and parents, arranging for medical treatment (both physical and psychological) is to be attempted.

Summing up, it could be stated what to do if a child discloses violence/abuse as: (i) Remain calm, (ii) Believe the child, (iii) Allow the child to talk, (iv) Show interest and concern, (v) Reassure and support the child, (vi) Take action; it could save a child's life. Do not : (i) become panic or overreact, (ii) Press the child to talk, (iii) promise anything you can not control, (iv) confront the offender, (v) blame or minimise the child's feelings, (vi) over-whelm the child with question.

5:04 Role of Teachers and other Professionals in Diagnosing and Reporting Suspected Cases of Child Abuse and Neglect

Since children spend most of their day with teachers, their role becomes extremely important in mitigating child abuse and neglect. Here are some of the ways teachers could contribute to safety of children and families.

1. Recognizing Signs of Abuse

The Role of Education in Preventing and Responding to Child Abuse and Neglect as reported by the Child Welfare Information Gateway is, "Educators are in an excellent position to notice behavioural indicators. As trained observers, they are sensitive to the range of behaviours exhibited by children at various developmental stages, and they are quick to notice behaviours that fall outside this range."

Since educators spend so much time with children, they can better notice physical, emotional, and behavioural changes. They can also talk to other educators that the child has interacted with, to gain a better understanding of the child's usual behaviour and any changes that may have occurred.

Resources such as the Child Welfare Training System (SWTS) - an advanced adult learning system for child welfare workers, other professionals, foster parents and mandatory reporters - can also help teachers learn more about recognizing signs of abuse.

2. Creating a safe environment

Educators also have the opportunity to create a safe environment in their classrooms and schools that allow children to feel comfortable to confide in them about potential abuse. This allows children to feel safe in the school environment, opening them to adults they can trust and talk to.

3. Supporting Parents, Care-givers and Family members

As educators also interact with care-givers, they are in a position to advise parents on 'at-home strategies' that can prevent child abuse and neglect. By building relationships with families, educators can have an opinion in protecting the children around them.

4. Educating themselves, and their students, on disparities

Educating oneself, and children, about disparities in society can also help better to understand the society and the world around them.

Building a classroom or school environment that respects all experiences can allow children to feel safer, and more trusting of educators. The article "Five Activities to Promote Diversity in the Classroom" by Purdue Global University states, "It is up to teachers to help students explore cultures that differ from their own". "It is important for us all to honour our differences," says Weaver, "And as the adults in the classroom, teachers have to model what that looks like for our children."

Racial disparities still exist within child welfare. By helping children and parents alike understand this, educators are also introducing their community to the ways inequality might play a part in child abuse and neglect, reporting, and family experiences.

Most of all, by teaching this type of material, teachers can also take a deep delve into their own biases, which will allow them to take action to be better educators, and guides, for children and families.

5. Copying and Support

If a child tells you he/she is being abused, take the situation seriously. The child's safety is most important. You can do the following:

i) Encourage the child to tell what happened

Assure the child that it is all right to talk about the experience, even if some one has threatened him/her to remain silent. Focus on listening and not investigating. Consider that children may use alternate terms for body parts. Allow the child to tell what happened and leave detailed questioning to professionals.

(ii) Remind the child he/she is not responsible for the abuse.

iii) Offer Comfort and assuage feelings

Talk politely to the child assuring that you are accessible to talk or simply listen at anytime; also assure that you will do everything that you can to help the child.

iv) Report the abuse

You can contact a local child welfare agency or the police department. Authorities will investigate the report and, if necessary, take steps to ensure the child's safety.

v) Helping the child to remain safe

Child's safety can be ensured by separating the child and abuser, and providing supervision if the child is in the presence of the abuser.

6. Diagnosis

Identifying abuse or neglect requires careful evaluation of the situation, including checking the physical and behavioural signs. In judging the child abuse / neglect, the following things contribute significantly.

- i) Physical examination of the child and evaluation of injuries or signs and symptoms of suspected child abuse or neglect.
- ii) Medical tests including X-rays and / or scan.
- iii) Obtaining information regarding the medical and developmental history of the child.
- iv) Observation of the child's behaviour.
- v) Observing the interactions between the child with parents / caregivers.
- vi) If possible, talking with the child.
- vii) Discussions with parents / caregivers.

7. Treatment and Medical Care

The first priority is ensuring the safety and protection for children who have been abused. Ongoing treatment focusses on preventing future abuse and reducing the long-term psychological and physical consequences of abuse.

If necessary, seek immediate medical attention if a child has signs of injury or fainting often. Follow up care with a healthcare provider, may be required. In severe cases of child abuse, medical care like psycho-therapy, trauma-focussed cognitive behavioural therapy (CBT) etc. may be required.

8. Reporting

If child abuse or neglect is suspected, report should be made to appropriate local child welfare agency or the police department to investigate further and take steps to ensure the child's safety by stopping abuse and preventing occurrence of future abuse.

5:05 Psycho-social Support and Referral Services for the Vulnerable Children

5:05:1 Psycho-social Support

The term 'Psycho-social' refers to the close relationship between collective aspects of any social entity. 'Psycho-social support' is defined as a process of facilitating resilience within individuals, families and communities. At the individual level, it aims to strengthen individuals' abilities to cope up with stress, manage emotions, build resilience and maintain healthy relationships with others in the community. Thus, psycho-social support can be termed as the actions that addresses both psychological and social needs of an individual i.e. it addresses a person's emotional, social, mental, and spiritual needs, all of which form essential elements of positive human development.

Psycho-social support can be adopted in particular situations to respond to the psychological and physical needs of the people concerned by helping them to accept the situation and cope with it.

Putting in short, psycho-social support helps people recover after a crisis has disrupted their lives.

5:05:1:01 Who Need Psycho-social Support?

All children need psycho-social support for their psychological and emotional well-being, as well as their physical and mental development. Some children need additional, specific psychological support if they have experienced extreme trauma or adversity or are not receiving necessary care-giver support.

Poverty, illness, conflict, neglect and abuse can all affect a child's psycho-social well-being.

As a result of HIV and AIDS, children may experience multiple traumas such as the illness and death of parents, violence and exploitation, stigma and discrimination, isolation and loneliness, and lack of adult support and guidance. All such children require specific psychological.

5:05:1:02 Need for Psycho-social Support

Psycho-social support should be an integral part of any emergency response programme. It helps individuals to heal the psychological wounds and rebuild social relationship after a critical event or emergency situation. It can help individuals to become active survivors rather than the passive victims, groaning under the shock and trauma. Psycho-social support can be both preventive and curative. It is preventive in the sense, it decreases the risk of developing mental health problem as an after effect of a traumatic experience undergone. It is curative in the sense, when it helps individuals to overcome and deal with psycho-social problems that may arise as an after effect of a shock or violence experienced. Both these two aspects of psycho-social support contribute to the building of resilience in the face of new crises or other challenging life situations.

5:05:1:03 Benefits of Psycho-social Support

- i) Psycho-social support helps to strengthen proactive factors for the child, including their ability to identify dangerous and risky situations.
- ii) Psycho-social support can help to promote holistic child and adolescent development, including physical, emotional and social development.
- iii) Psycho-social support, for example through provision of life skills activities helps to strengthen children's resilience and the ability to cope up with difficult situations.
- iv) Psycho-social support activities can help to keep safe and can be an avenue to identify risk factors in child's life.
- v) Regular psychological support provision can help to re-establish relationships between a child with other children, as well as between children and adults, and can contribute to a sense of normality and routine.
- vi) Psycho-social support can support children, adolescents and care-givers in having a sense of control of their own life, a sense of belonging and can help children create relationships and bonds with family members, friends and community members.

vii) Psycho-social support can be offered at community level through community and family support activities, for example through promoting and providing every day activities such as schooling, activating social networks and in age-friendly spaces.

viii) Through provision of community-based support, resilience of communities and their capacities to support one another can be strengthened.

5:05:2 Referral Services for the Vulnerable Children

5:05:2:01 Meaning of 'Referral' and its Functions

In the context of child protection, a referral happens when someone contacts children's services, because they are concerned about a child's safety and well-being.

A referral can be made by any one, including a parent, extended family members, friend, doctor, teacher, or health visitor,

An initial contact is made where children's Social Care Service Centre is contacted about a child, who may be a child in Need / Child in Need of Protection. An initial contact will be progressed to a Referral where the social worker or manager considers an assessment and/or services may be required for a Child in Need.

The Referrer will be asked specifically if he/she holds any information about difficulties being experienced by family/household due to domestic abuse, mental illness, substance misuse and/or learning difficulties.

When information is received through a referral indicating that there are concerns about a child's safety and well-being, children's services have 24 hours to determine what type of response is required. In making this decision, the social worker in the children's services must consider whether:

- Child requires immediate protection;
- Child is in need;

- there are reasonable grounds to suspect that the child is suffering or likely to suffer significant harm and whether any further enquiries are to be made;
- any services which the child and / or family require and what they are;
- any further specialist assessments are needed to help children's services determine what further action to take
- any action needs to be taken; and
- if there is no further action they can take, whether to refer the matter to more appropriate agency.

Thus, 'Referral' is the process of noticing a concern about a child, deciding what actions need to be taken and reporting the concern to the person who made the referral. This may be done directly or by giving information to the family.

5:05:2:02 Needs Assessment

Assessment plays a significant role in determining what activities are planned in a psycho-social response. The Social Worker conducts multi-agency assessments. The objective of the assessment is to collect information and analyse the needs of the child and/or its family as well as the nature and level of any risk of harm to the child. The investigation always requires to the social worker to:

- visit the family and discuss the allegations which have been made;
- conduct and interview with the child away from the family;
- liaise with other professionals who are involved with the child and / or family;
- assess the developmental needs of the child;
- assess the capacity of the affected child to help itself;
- assess the ability of the parents to respond to the child's needs;
- consider the impact of the family, the family history, the wider family and environmental factors on the parent's capacity to respond to their child's needs and the child's developmental progress.
- how the violence / abuse has affected the child physically, emotionally and socially.

- what is needed to help the child to achieve psychological well-being.

5:05:2:03 Referral Services of Psycho-social Support Offered by Children's Social Care Services Centre

Some of the important referral services of psycho-social support are briefly explained below:

1. Psychological First Aid (PFA)

'Psychological First Aid' (PFA) is evidence based approach that is built on the concept of human resilience. PFA aims to reduce stress symptoms and assist in healthy recovery following a traumatic event, natural disaster, public health emergency or even a personal crisis.

'Psychological First Aid' (PFA) addresses basic needs and reduces psychological distress by providing a caring and comforting presence, showing empathy, concern and education on common stress reactions. It empowers the individual by supporting strengths and encouraging existing coping skills. It provides connections to natural support networks, and referrals to professional services when needed.

PFA is a tool that each of us can use to reduce for stress level. By understanding stress reactions and utilising PFA principles, any one can enhance resilience in oneself and others, in one's family, work place and community. PFA does not rely on direct services by mental health professionals, but rather on skills that most of us already have.

Basic Steps in PFA

- i) Establishing contact and rapport.
- ii) Enquiring about what happened and allow the individual to talk about his/her experience, concern, and feelings without forcing to talk if he/she is unwilling to do so.
- iii) Assuring the individual his/her emotional reactions are quite normal.
- iv) If necessary, helping in decision-making.
- v) Providing information about where and how to get specific assistance sought by the individual.

2. Psychological Counselling

Counselling is an effective way for people who are having problems that they can not handle or control or just do not know how to deal with, to find help from a trained or professional Counsellor. Counsellors use empirically supported interventions and specialized interpersonal skills to facilitate change and empower clients. Psycho-social counselling is one among the many types of counselling. But all types of counselling deal with talk therapy. A counsellor will actively listen to the person with problem and ask probing questions to get at a deeper level of what is really going on. The therapist will then either explore with the ways that can change the clients thinking, attitudes and responses about the issue(s) or teach him / her coping skills or skills that can correct this concern of the client on his / her own.

In psycho-social counselling with regard to child abuse, it reaffirms the child's rights and alleviates the feeling of guilt or shame. Psycho-social counselling services include screening, psycho-social assessment, planning, counselling intervention and follow up.

3. Capacity Building

The primary goal of capacity building is to improve the ability of the child based on the needs perceived. This is a continuous process which all stakeholders participate to enhance the skills and knowledge of children vulnerable for abuse / exploitation, to achieve the desired objectives.

4. Providing Legal Information

Legal information regarding the rights and range of options available to the abused children should be provided to the affected children. Services which are appropriate, child sensitive and child friendly should be provided to the abused children.

5. Social Workers Support

Social workers are the most important actors in the referral mechanisms for vulnerable children and child protection sector. It is the social workers who process the applications for social care and protection programmes. They help vulnerable children to develop social skills and practical life skills.

6. Family Referral Services

Family Referral Services engage and assist vulnerable children, young people and families to access the support services they need to prevent escalation. They link families to a range of local support services, including case coordination, housing, parenting education, supported play-group, drug and alcohol / mental health services, youth support services, and respite care. Family referral services also have a role in improving the knowledge of service providers about local support services in their catchment area and strengthening co-ordination and collaboration.

Summing up, psycho-social support services and referral services offered to vulnerable children mostly dwell on fulfilling their physical, emotional social belonging needs. The psycho-social support services professional requires certain skills, qualification and training to provide comprehensive care and support to vulnerable children.

5:06 Teachers as Mentors of Children for Ensuring their Participation and Protection

5:06:1 Meaning of 'Mentor' and 'Mentoring'

In the broad sense, a 'mentor' is someone who takes special interest in helping a pupil to develop into a successful professional. The mentoring relationship between a teacher and students expands beyond teaching to advancement in the educational and personal growth of the student.

To mentor someone i.e. the process of mentoring is defined as "to support and encourage individuals to manage their own learning in order that they may maximise their potential, develop their skills, improve their performance and become the person they want to be" (Parsloe, 2009).

Mentoring is a dynamic and collaborative process. Effective mentoring increases student performance, retention of knowledge and commitment.

Motivation and empowerment generate monitoring, where both the mentor and mentee (one who gets mentoring) share their skills. In order to have an effecting mentoring relationship, the mentor must try to remove obstacles, give emotional support, and allow for recognition of achievement in the work setting. Thus mentees are encouraged to work harder to achieve their goals and ultimately achieve higher self-esteem as well (Grossman, 2012).

5:06:2 Elements of Mentorship

Huybrecht et.al (2011) have identified the following elements considered important for mentors.

1. Ability to give Critical and Constructive Feedback

Each student has the right to know their strengths and weaknesses. While giving feedback, the mentor should keep in mind that he / she is specific, focussing both the positive and negative aspects in the performance of an individual student, as that would give a scope for improvement in performance. Feedback should be delivered frequently and as scheduled.

2. Availability of Time

Frequent student-teacher interaction is a critical component of mentoring. Mentors should be available and accessible to open communication and questions. During the conversation between mentor and mentee, there should be exchange of knowledge, ways to improve skills and strategies to be adopted to apply knowledge into practice and willingness to share information.

3. Positive Attitude

The attitude of the mentors is more important than the learning environment. Students look out for role models in their mentors and hence mentors should be positive role models for their students. His / her positive vibe greatly impacts the students. A mentor should enhance the strengths and dilutes the weakness of the student. The mentor should develop strategies to explore possible solutions for the weaknesses.

4. Patience and Enthusiasm

A good mentor exhibits patience and enthusiasm, and motivates the students by grooming them into responsible human beings. A mentor needs to take interest in the needs of the students.

These attributes are incredibly important for a mentor. Great mentors will tide over momentary periods of frustration by exercising patience.

5:06:3 Difference Between a Teacher and Mentor

A teacher teaches or instructs i.e. reaches out knowledge to students, but the students have to apply this knowledge and put into practice by themselves and develop the appropriate skills so as to achieve their goals. But a mentor not only shares knowledge with the mentee, he / she gives advice, provides guidance, emotional support, offers critical and constructive feedback frequently, serves as an ally, advocate, a counsellor and confidant.

As the mentor instructs the mentee, a closer bond forms between both of them. This relationship is fundamental behind every great mentorship. If this relationship does not exist, the mentee will be less likely to follow the mentor's guidance or even trust what he has to say.

A student can have this relationship with teachers, but it is not a requirement for good teaching or providing good learning experience. Most schools measure teaching performance through the students' grades, not by how well students get along with the teacher. However, by developing this special relationship, a person can be both a teacher and a mentor at the same time. Thus mentorship is more holistic, complex and based on fulfilling vision.

Roles and Responsibilities of a Mentor

5:06:4:01 Roles of a Mentor

Mentorships are designed to help and guide people to overcome challenges or achieve a goal. For adults this could be a professional mentor to help advance their career. For children, a mentor's role is usually to act as a role model or support giver to improve their self-esteem or talk through problems.

A mentor might :

- i) Act as a positive role model for children to follow or imbibе.
- ii) Improve confidence and self-esteem in children.
- iii) Provide emotional support
- iv) Help the personal development
- v) Provide help and guidance to achieve personal goals
- vi) Be a friendly face to chat or play with

Mentor sessions often take place in a relaxed, informal environment to encourage open discussion.

5:06:4:02 Important Responsibilities of a Mentor

Important responsibilities of a mentor teacher, revolve around the qualities required of a teacher to be good in mentoring. These may be organised into the following five general categories. (i) Organisation, (ii) Communication, (iii) Creating opportunities for students to open-up, (iv) Professional Competence and experience and (v) Interpersonal skills.

i) Organisation

1. Organizes his/her activities and schedules with proper planning but keeps scheduling flexible.
2. Has a pre-arranged time to communicate, plan and assess.
3. Comes well prepared with questions, ideas and dilemmas.
4. Recognizes the priorities that may pull him/her away from scheduled planning times and establishes alternatives.
5. Efficient use of time.

ii) Communication

1. Able to articulate effective instructional strategies.

2. Listens attentively.
3. Asks questions that prompt reflection and understanding.
4. Offers critiques in positive and productive ways.
5. Uses technology like email, whatsapp etc. effectively.
6. Has enthusiasm and passion for teaching.
7. Is discreet and maintains confidentiality.

iii) Creating opportunities for students to open-up

1. Promotes student participation in classroom discussion and initiation of conversation in mentoring sessions.
2. Is open to new ideas.
3. Asks probing questions facilitating students' thinking.
4. Asks for justifications and rationales for new ideas with data.

iv) Professional Competence and Experience

1. Child-friendly teacher
2. Has excellent knowledge of pedagogy and subject matter.

3. Regarded as an outstanding teacher by colleagues.
4. Has confidence in his/her instructional skills.
5. Demonstrates excellent classroom management skills.
6. Maintains a net work of professional contacts.
7. Understands the policies and procedures of the school and teachers' association.
8. Engages in professional development to enhance his/her knowledge and skills.
9. Is a meticulous observer of classroom practice.
10. Collaborates well with other teachers and administrators.

v) Interpersonal skills

1. Is able to maintain a trusting professional relationship.
2. Knows how to express care for a student's emotional and professional needs.
3. Works well with students from different cultures.
4. Treating all students with respect.

5. Is approachable; easily establishes rapport with others.
6. Is patient.

5:06:4:03 Benefits of Mentoring

- i) Builds strong relationship between the mentor teacher and students.
- ii) Develops higher self-esteem and confidence in students.
- iii) Reduces risk of addiction to alcohol / illegal drug use among students.
- iv) Improves behaviour of students at home and school.
- v) Better school performance of students.
- vi) Healthier life choices.
- vii) Helps students to identify and achieve career goals.
- viii) Encourages students and empowers in personal development.
- ix) Students feel safe and secure.

Summing up, mentoring is about supporting and encouraging students to manage their own learning in order that they maximize their potential, develop their skills, improve their performance and become the person they want to be.

5:06:4:04 Role of Mentor in the Protection of Children

Children can be subjected to neglect, abuse, violence and exploitation anywhere. There is some abuse that may happen inside the school premises, while a lot of it is what children suffer at home and in non-school environments. A child in the class may be a victim of violence / abuse / exploitation that happens outside the school. As a mentor, the teacher cannot ignore it. Rather he / she must help the child. This too is possible only if the teacher is able to identify that there is a problem and he / she spends time to understand it and explores possible solutions. Mentor always thinks that his / her duty is to protect children and does not come to an end once he / she leaves the school premises. The life of a child who is out of the school system can be changed with the mentor's positive intervention. The mentor teacher just has to prepare himself / herself for it and know more about their problems as well as what can be done to help.

5:07 Positive Discipline Techniques for the Teachers

5:07:1 Concept of Positive Discipline

Positive discipline is a model based on psychology which allows students to learn and adapt their behaviours to meet expectations in the classroom, while simultaneously teaching them how to make better choices in their path to adulthood. Positive discipline is a more effective way to manage misbehaving students in the classroom, rather than using punishment or rewards.

The five principles of 'Positive Discipline', according to Dr. Jane Nelson are :

1. It is kind and firm at the same time.
2. It helps children feel a sense of belonging and significance.
3. It is effective long-term.
4. It teaches valuable social and life skills for good character.
5. It invites children to discover how capable they are and to use their personal power in constructive ways.

5:07:1:01 Classroom Discipline Techniques

If a student misbehaves in the classroom, a teacher must have a few techniques that they can use to reduce or eliminate the unwanted behaviour. From misbehaving in the classroom to not doing the assigned work, there are many ways to deal with unwanted behaviour including punishment, discipline, or even using rewards. However, the most effective method for dealing with students who are misbehaving in the classroom is using positive discipline. According to the American Academy of Pediatrics, there are many types of positive discipline, and whatever technique is used to prevent or reduce misbehaviour will only be effective if:

- Both the student and teacher understand what the problem behaviour is and what the expected consequence is for the misbehaviour
- The appropriate consequence is consistently applied every time the misbehaviour occurs
- The manner you deliver the technique matters (calm versus aggressive)

- It gives the students a reason for a specific consequence to help them learn

In most cases, using punishment or rewards is not needed, as the majority of problems or misbehaviours can be dealt with using positive discipline.

5:07:1:02 Difference Between Punishment and Positive Discipline

The meaning of punishment is simple - it is an action or penalty that is imposed on a student for misbehaving or breaking a rule. However, the impact on students can be very detrimental, from inducing physical or emotional pain to not being effective in reducing future misbehaviours. Punishment is used to control the behaviour of students, in two different ways:

1. Negative discipline involves verbal disapproval and reprimands
2. Corporal punishment involves severe emotional or physical pain

Corporal punishment sends a message to the students that violence is not a viable option for solving problems. Alternatively, positive discipline is the practice of training or teaching a student to obey the code of behaviour or rules in both the short and long term. Instead of controlling the behaviour of students, teachers can use positive discipline to develop a child's behaviours through self-control and making positive choices.

According to Teachers Unite, which is a movement of public school teachers in the U.S., fighting for social justice, punitive punishment toward students — suspensions, aggressive policing and reactive strategies — go against human rights and fail to address the real problem. However, preventative and constructive approaches that use positive discipline create a positive school atmosphere and also teaches students conflict resolution and behaviour skills. In the end, positive discipline can help to shape a child, by using encouragement rather than meaningless and even painful consequences, like punishment.

5:07:1:03 Positive Discipline Techniques

There are tons of techniques that teachers can use to reinforce good behaviour with positive discipline including the following :

1. Set the Classroom rules at the start of the year

The teacher should set the classroom rules and explain to the students clearly what are permissible and what are not, at the beginning of the academic year itself. Further, the teacher should have consistent expectations from the students.

2. Set Manageable goals for students

The teacher should set short-term goal, if a student complains that his work is too hard or too long.

3. Appropriate behaviour should be reinforced either through reward or praise
4. Remain neutral during conflicts

When students are involved in group work, there may be occasions, that one group may complain about another group on any issue. The teacher should remain neutral and suggest a solution that is accepted by both the groups.

5. Make time to listen

When students are moaning about their work, often the main reason is fear of failure, rather than the fact that the task is beyond their ability to complete it. Rather than dismissing their worries, the teacher should give them time to speak about what their problem is. Generally, just a few minutes of listening to students, works wonders.

6. Model Good Behaviour

The key to promoting good behaviour in students is that the teacher himself / herself to be a positive role model for them. The teacher should be polite, approach arguments calmly, and not lose temper at any point of arguing, speak quietly, be considerate and expect the students to do the same.

7. Provide Students with acceptable alternatives

Students who lose their temper need to be taught ways to calm themselves and how to use appropriate language to express their frustration. Too often schools punish students by removing privileges or placing them in a contained setting without teaching more acceptable alternatives and providing opportunities for practice. Without opportunities to learn and practise, it is impossible to improve.

8. Remove objects in the environment that causes distractions.
9. Search for the root cause of the misbehaviour in a student and try to remove it.
10. Create individual plans for students.
11. Provide a space and place for students to feel comfortable enough to work out their feelings and emotions. One strategy is try to role-play. Practise acceptable behaviour in class and enact a role-reversal. Assume the role of the student doing what you (the teacher) disapprove of, while letting the student practise teaching you what you want him or her to do, until sufficient mastery of the new behaviour is evident.

12. Give a hard stare

The teacher should use subtle strategies when students are messing about distracting each other. The teacher should just pause, raise the eye brows and stare at the student until he / she realizes that the teacher has spotted. This will be much more effective than shouting at the student indulged in mischief.

13. Non-Verbal Cuing

Use of appropriate gestures and body language like nod, smile and looking directly at the eyes of the student are to be used for respectful communication. Non-verbal cues like facial expressions, body posture and hand signals could also be used.

14. Use of Praise

Praising students when they put in hardwork, exhibit teamspirit during group work, provide appropriate response for the question putforth in the class and exhibit good behaviour, it encourages them a lot and motivate them to continue, only to improve their performance and behaviour in the classroom.

15. Being Supportive

Problems mostly arise when students do not know what is expected of them. So before beginning any task with the class or group, the teacher is to spend sometimes talking it through to make sure they understand it. If they struggle to catch it, the teacher may show some related pictures or give them few key words to start them off. In this way, the teacher could be of support to students, without doing the work for them.

Using the above mentioned positive techniques will help teachers maintain a positive atmosphere and support an inclusive learning environment. In fact, when addressing a specific child, it is important for teachers to work closely with the caregivers and the student to develop a positive discipline plan that works. One of the most critical parts of positive discipline is to help students learn the new behaviours that meet expectations in the classroom, home and elsewhere.

5:07:1:04 Benefits of Positive Discipline

Using positive discipline techniques can help teachers overcome many challenges in the classroom and help students learn and make better choices in the future. In fact, using positive discipline in the classroom not only increases academic success in the classroom but provides many other benefits, including:

- Students show respect for the teacher
- Students are on task and engaged

- Less disciplinary measures are needed
- Fewer suspension and expulsions
- Students see rules as fair
- Attendance improves

These are just a few of the benefits that can be seen from using positive discipline techniques in the classroom. On top of this, the benefits also extend beyond the classroom, into the home life, sports and social environment of the student, from being more respectful to everyone to understanding the social norms in different situations.

5:08 Skills for Celebrating Child Rights

5:08:1 Meaning of Child Rights Celebration by Teacher

5:08:1:01 Child Rights

The UN Convention has 54 articles that cover all aspects of a child's life and set out the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights that all children everywhere are entitled to. It also explains how adults and governments must work together to make sure all children can enjoy all their rights.

Every child has rights "without discrimination of any kind, irrespective of the child's or his or her parent's or legal guardian's race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability, birth or other status" (Article 2).

The Convention must be seen as a whole: all the rights are linked and no right is more important than another. The right to relax and play (Article 31) and the right to freedom of expression (Article 13) have equal importance as the right to be safe from violence (Article 19) and the right to education (Article 28).

There are four Articles in the Convention that are seen as special. They are known as the "General Principles" and they help to interpret all the other Articles and play a fundamental role in realising all the rights in the Convention for all children. They are:

1. Non-discrimination (Article 2)
2. Best interest of the child (Article 3)
3. Right to life survival and development (Article 6)
4. Right to be heard (Article 12)

5:08:1:02 Meaning of Celebration of Child Rights by Teachers

Teachers are mainly responsible for the development of potentials of children to the maximum, safeguarding their rights and protection. Child Rights Day is celebrated every year on 20th of November, to reconsider the real human rights for all the children. Celebration of child rights by teacher does not end with this. It really means the appreciation and observance of child rights in all what the teacher does, particularly in his classroom practices, disciplining of students, handling the disabled children, taking all efforts to ensure child protection in and outside the school premises. In short, the teacher should not only reach out knowledge to students and develop their skills, but serve as mentor to students.

5:08:2 Skills Required for the Teacher to Celebrate the Child Rights

Teachers are mainly responsible for protecting the welfare of children. They work with families to ensure that children are safe, healthy, and have their basic needs met. Teachers also work with children who have been abused, exploited or neglected. To be successful in respecting and observing child rights in their teaching career, teachers need to be child friendly and have a variety of skills, including keen observation that helps to recognise and identify abuse, neglect, exploitation and learning difficulties, and other special needs of school children, good communication, problem-solving or organisational skills. In addition to these, teachers should be good in providing effective interventions in the cases of child abuse, empathetic and good in assessing the grievous situations and their impact on affected children.

A brief account these skills to observe and appreciate child rights are given below:

1. Being a Child friendly teacher:

(a) In classroom practices:

- Avoiding one way communication and giving opportunities to children to come up with their doubts and queries.
- Discussing child rights in the classroom as well as with parents in the PTA meetings.

- Avoiding corporal punishments; using positive reinforcement techniques like dialogue and counselling to discipline the child.
- Not discriminating any one among the children. Taking active steps to reach out to children from minority and other discriminated groups.
- Not engaging child labour at home or in work place.
- Helping the child to express his / her problems either through drawing or by writing a story or simply talking to the teacher or school counsellor, social worker or to a friend in the class.

(b) In Disciplining Practices

- Respecting the child's dignity.
- Developing pro-social behaviour, self-discipline and character.
- Respecting the child's developmental needs and quality of life.
- Ensuring fairness and transformative justice.
- Promoting solidarity.

(c) Having Skills to handle disabilities

- Stopping negative stereotypical attitudes about children with disabilities by avoiding negative words.

- Depicting children with disabilities with equal status on par with those without disabilities.
- Referring the child whose disability is identified, for developmental screening and early intervention.
- Actively involving parents of children with disabilities as active members in planning school and after-school activities.

2. Crisis Intervention Skills

A teacher needs to be able to assess a situation and determine the best course of action. Teachers might need to intervene in situations where children are at risk, such as when they are being abused or neglected by their parents. In these cases, it is important for the teacher to have strong crisis intervention skills so that they can diffuse a situation and ensure the safety of the child.

3. Intervention Skills

Intervention is the process by which a teacher can help children overcome challenges in their life. This may involve providing resources to families, such as food or clothing, and connecting them with community organizations that can provide appropriate additional support. It also involves helping children develop coping mechanisms so that they can deal with stress more effectively.

5. Empathy

Empathy is the ability to understand and share another person's feelings. Teachers often use empathy when interacting with children who have experienced trauma or abuse. Empathy can help a teacher connect with the child and build trust so that the child feels comfortable in opening up about their experiences.

5. Organizational Skills

Organization is the ability to keep track of multiple tasks and responsibilities. Teachers having strong organizational skills can help the children to manage their workload and ensure they complete all necessary tasks in a timely manner.

6. Understanding Child Development

Child development is the process by which children grow and change. It is important for the teachers who work with children of all ages, to understand how a child's developmental stage can affect their behaviour and needs. A teacher who understands child development, can better assess situations and determine what types of interventions might be most effective.

7. Communication Skills

Communication is the ability to convey information clearly and concisely. As a teacher, you may be required to communicate with the child over the phone or in person. Strong communication skills can help you relay important information about their need and answer any questions they may have. It is also important for you to communicate effectively with other professionals involved in each case, such as law enforcement officers, medical professionals and attorneys.

8. Skill of Controlling Emotions and Remaining Calm

Teachers may have to work with children who have experienced trauma, abuse or neglect. These situations can be emotionally challenging for both the child and the teacher. Having patience allows a teacher to listen to the children's stories without becoming overwhelmed by emotion. It also helps them remain calm when they are dealing with a child who is experiencing intense emotions.

9. Assessment Skills

Assessment is the process by which teachers evaluate a situation and determine what resources are needed to help children and their families. This skill involves assessing each case individually, determining what information is necessary to make an informed decision and evaluating how well interventions work.

10. Policy Awareness

A strong policy awareness is important for teachers, as they often work with government agencies and other organizations to help families. This involves knowing the policies of these groups and understanding how their rules affect your job. For example, if you are working with a family that needs legal assistance, you need to know what types of remedies are available and how to apply for them.

11. Problem Solving Skills

Problem solving is the ability to identify and resolve child rights issues. Teachers often use problem solving skills when working with children who have experienced trauma or abuse. For example, if a child has behavioural issues at school, a teacher may help him/her find resources to address his/her needs.

12. Human Behaviour Skills

Human behaviour skills are important for teachers because they help them understand the behaviours of the children. For example, a child may be acting out in class or at home because he/she is experiencing emotional distress and need professional support. Having human behaviour skills can allow a teacher to recognize when someone needs outside assistance and refer them to the right resources.
